All About Us Women

Burgundi Allison was born in Wilmington and raised in the same neighborhood that nurtured her parents and grandparents — Southbridge. A Tower Hill School graduate, Burgundi earned her undergraduate degree from The National Treasure Morgan State University in Baltimore where she has lived and worked for 25 years. Professionally, Burgundi has focused her work on young people, developing programs centering on their needs and voices to equip them with the skills necessary to live out their wildest dreams. She also holds a Masters Degree in Non-profit Management.

A mother of two young women, Burgundi is a published author, podcast host, speaker, and entrepreneur. She is founding partner of Imara Partnership, a Baltimore-based consultancy focused on breaking cycles of trauma within families. At her day job, she is Associate Director for Diversion and Prevention in the Juvenile Justice Strategy Group at the Annie E. Casey Foundation where she leads the development of strategies that support community-led approaches to keeping kids out of the clutches of the juvenile justice system.
